

Celebrating our local aviation heritage.

The unveiling ceremony of The Langley Airfield Memorial

For 20 years, Langley, Slough played a substantial role in Britain's aviation history. Some of the finest fighter and multi role aircraft that served in the RAF and other world air forces that played such a pivotal role in winning the numerous air wars of WW2 were made and flew from Langley, Slough. This airfield also played its part in heralding in the new jet age and helped kick start post war trans-continental commercial air travel before Heathrow was fully established.

The importance of this air field has effectively been forgotten over time, with the local populace now totally unaware of just how significant their local aviation heritage is. Thankfully, this is now going to be rectified. The Airfields of Britain Conservation Trust (ABCT) are fully sponsoring a carved granite memorial, which will be unveiled on what is left of the original air field, on Saturday October 5th, 11am, at Harvey Park, Tamar Way, Langley, SL3-8TA., with the event having the complete backing of Slough Council.

If you would like more information of the airfield's history, or plan to attend, please contact Pete Trafford on peter.trafford@hotmail.co.uk.

We would love to see you there and be part of finally recognising our important aviation heritage!